Treatise on the gods (Book, 1932) [WorldCat.org]

In this sardonic, blasphemous and sometimes ferociously cynical pamphlet, H.L. Mencken castigates the irrationality and incredibility of all religions, e.g. there are 175,000 discrepancies in the manuscripts of the Christian New Testament. But he considers religion rightly as one of (for him) the greatest inventions of all times, giving the clergy enormous economical (all the temples became extremely rich) and political power.
